

The Indian Cricket League (ICL) was innovated in 2007, with backing handed by Zee Entertainment Enterprises. The ICL wasn't recognised by the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) or the International Cricket Council (ICC) and the BCCI weren't pleased with its commission members joining the ICL superintendent board. To help players from joining the ICL, the BCCI increased the prize plutocrat in their own domestic events and also assessed continuance bans on players joining the ICL, which was considered a revolutionary league by the board
